Taiwan's most beautiful sunset

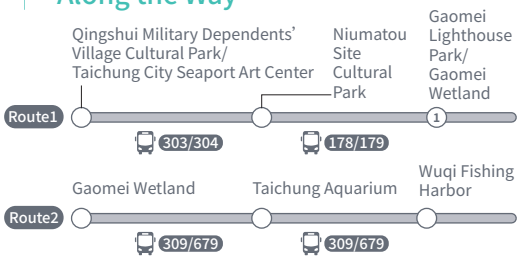

01 Gaomei Wetland

An once-in-a-lifetime must-visit scenic attraction.

Praised as a "breathtaking sight everyone must see at least once in their lifetime," travelers from far and wide journey here just to witness Taiwan's most beautiful sunset—which is famous across the world. Stroll along the winding wooden boardwalk and watch the sun sink below the horizon, transforming the sky into a dreamy gradient of orange melting into indigo and spilling color across the vast heavens and reflecting off the endless sea as it does so. The sweeping view where sky meets ocean feels like a dreamscape so captivating that it is hard to leave behind.

02 Dakeng Ecological Park

Glowing fireflies and dancing butterflies, Taichung's most enchanting backyard.

Often called "the back garden of Taichung," Dakeng is the perfect place to explore the local natural environment, from insects to native plants. With different ecological themes highlighted each season, visitors can enjoy flowers, fireflies, and butterflies in spring; spot rhinoceros beetles in summer; discover the seeds of various plants in autumn; and watch blue tiger butterflies in winter.

04 Fushoushan Farm

Clouds hover playfully above the mountains as the five-colour maple leaves announce the arrival of autumn.

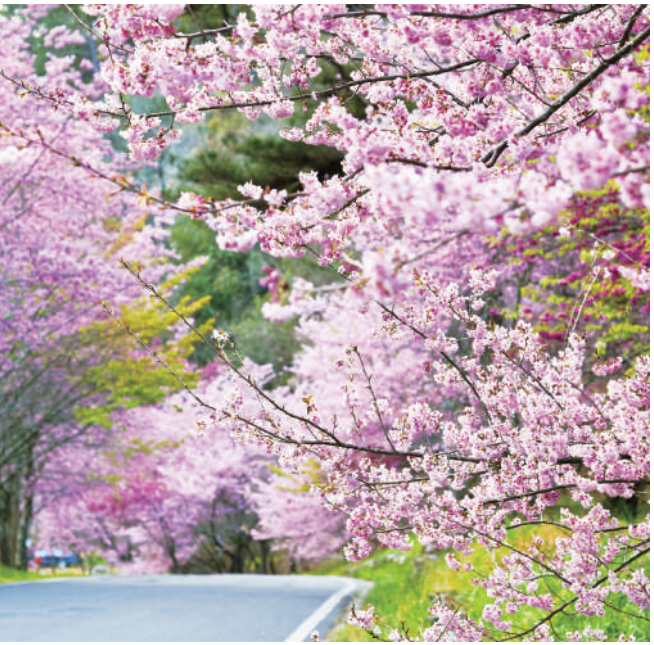

Nestled between the Hehuanshan and Xueshan mountain ranges, Fushoushan is surrounded by rolling peaks. Its unique pastoral scenery and high-mountain climate create distinctly beautiful scenery in each of the four seasons. When the autumn winds arrive, vibrant layers of golden yellow, deep orange, and fiery red transform every corner of the garden into a serene and wondrous landscape—exactly how autumn was meant to be.

05 Wuling Farm

Cherry blossoms everywhere!

Thanks to its exceptional location, Wuling Farm boasts a natural canvas of different colors throughout the year and is also home to Taiwan's treasured Formosan landlocked salmon. Every February, spring paints the valleys in shades of delicate pinks and whites as rows of romantic Wushe cherry trees—stretching for kilometers—bloom at the same time, making Wuling Farm one of Taiwan's most celebrated cherry blossom destinations.

08 Waipu Lotus Valley

Fields of gold and waves of blossoms, forgetting every worry in every season.

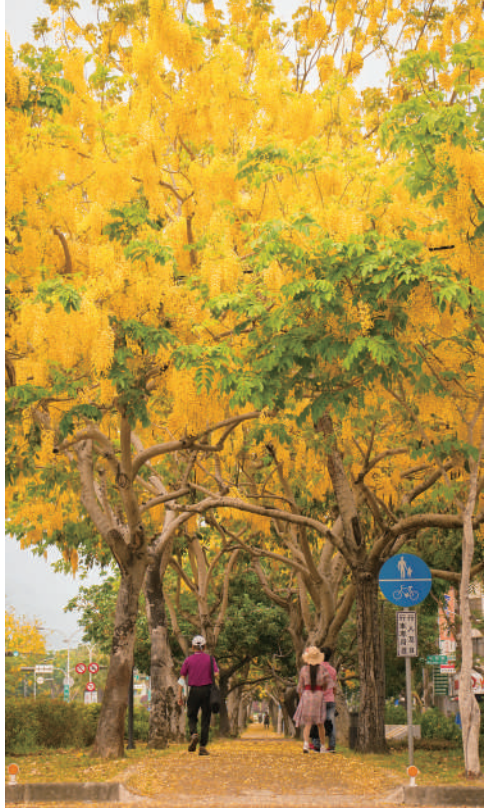

In Waipu's Wangyou Valley, fields transform with the seasons. During the fallow rice-growing periods, carpets of cosmos or rapeseed flowers roll across the land like a luscious carpet, while in the growing season, the valley glows with golden waves of rice. The rural scenery changes with the seasons, inviting travelers to pause, immerse in its sereneness, and feel the vastness of the countryside.

Ao-Feng Hill Park — Niumatou Site Cultural Park — Qingshui Old Street (98)

111

A century-old market that has preserved the flavours of the past.

99 Taichung Second Market

The area centering around the Hexagonal Building, whose red-brick wall exterior oozes a sense of history, is also known as "Rokujodori." It was once an upscale market known as the "Japanese Market" to the locals. Today, it has transformed into a "local kitchen" that Taichung residents reminisce about from their childhood. Try the turnip cake with traditional black tea or the aromatic slow-braised pork rice, century-old round meat dumpling and a classic honey cake shop nearby. It is not surprising that this market remains a local favourite!

Along the Way

Taichung Shiyakusho — 5mins — Central Bookstore — 5mins — Taichung Second Market (99)

100 Taichung Fifth Market

Old Taichung flavors next to Taichung literary park.

With a history of nearly 90 years, this old market was a hub for trading pickled vegetables in the old days. To meet the breakfast needs of the market vendors, various food stalls gradually developed. Options include oyster porridge with roasted pork, thirst-quenching iced black tea and frozen taro, freshly steamed meat buns, and fried tofu with fine noodles—all simple, delicious, and affordable. Every dish represents the everyday meals of Taichung people.
